Overview

The goal of neoadjuvant therapy in HER2+ disease is to increase the chance for breast conserving surgery (BCS), if desired, to reduce the extent of axillary surgery by down-staging involved axillary nodes, and to determine whether there is an in vivo response to HER2-directed therapy, as patients who achieve a pathologic complete response (pCR) can anticipate a higher probability of avoiding both disease recurrence and death from breast cancer.<sup>35, 36, 37</sup> There are 2 landmark trials in the neoadjuvant setting, which the group considered in their discussions, NEOSPHERE and TRYPHAENA, and results of these trials are detailed in Table 2<sup>38, 40</sup> Both of these trials demonstrated that the addition of pertuzumab to

Third Trimester Pregnancy

Considering the third trimester pregnancy losses, shortened gestation length, infant prematurity, and infant loss observed in the present study combined with the mechanism of action of ipilimumab (i.e. inhibition of CTLA4 and immunostimulation) and the localized expression of the target in the placenta, a drug relationship to the observed developmental mortality could not be ruled out.
